Attached is a photo showing the areas where it is intended to cut the branches. The tree is now leaning so heavily to the right and is propped up by the fence! It is intended to select places on the main trunks where a young branch /shoot is pointing strongly to the left in the hope of counteracting the tree falling to the right. The final selection of the branches will be done to make sure the tree, in time has an even canopy when it grows back. Therefore cuts would be made approx. 3 and 4 m from the tips of the leaders, back to the junction with a young outward facing shoot /young branch.

If there are further high winds, the tree will fall over so I would be grateful if you can attend to this as speedily as possible.

With thanks
Richard Donoyou
